'Mission well done' Aurora crews wrap up Op Impact contributions

Sara White,
Managing editor

Keep remarks short and sweet were the orders – from the top down, as the Royal Canadian Air Force and families welcomed home the first of the last CP140 Aurora crews returning from the Middle East and Operation Impact.

"The best thing I can say for all of you coming back?" asked Major-General Christian Drouin, Commander 1 Canadian Air Division/ Canadian NORAD Region. "Welcome home. The entire command says thank you to you – and your family – for your dedication over the past few months. Your contribution, and that of the entire CP140 community, has made a significant difference on this mission. It allowed the operation to progress forward, and it allowed us the flexibility to maintain commitments at home.

"Your legacy is, "leave as many, operate as one."

Drouin praised Aurora air and ground crews, and supporting Canadian Armed Forces personnel working from home, for deploying on short notice in October 2014 and being ready for the first flying mission within hours of arriving on scene.

"You committed time and energy to deliver air power, 'eyes in the sky.' Your delivery and timeliness of product earned praise from our partners, and we could not be more proud of each and every one of you."

14 Wing Greenwood Commander Colonel Mike Adamson said the significance of the return of Canada's long range patrol capability in Operation Impact is “not lost,” as Drouin, along with Canadian Joint Operations’ Major-General Bill Seymour, also a former 14 Wing commander; flew in to welcome the first crew returning.

“Mission well done,” said Adamson. “Thank you to everyone for contributing to the mission and seeing us through. This was a wing effort, with four elements and squadrons represented in just this returning crew.”

Adamson turned to the waiting family members, many with posters, flowers and balloons.

“The sacrifices you’ve made over the months have been worthwhile, all so we could send our members off to do business.”

Although the aircraft and crew have returned to Canada, additional members of the Aurora detachment continue to return to Canada in smaller numbers.

Major-General Christian Drouin, commander 1 Canadian Air Division/ Canadian NORAD Region, landed at 14 Wing Greenwood moments before the arrival of the Royal Canadian Air Force’s CP140 Aurora and its crew, returning from its surveillance role with Operation Impact.

Since October 2014, the Aurora flew 881 sorties as part of Air Task Force-Iraq, the international coalition to counter Daesh in Iraq. Initially, two CP140 aircraft deployed, providing essential overland intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance capability with their upgraded and technologically advanced sensors. Crews located potential targets and helped the coalition build a picture of what was happening on the ground.

The sorties flown by the Aurora detachment would not have been possible without the personnel and supporting capabilities. This includes the aircrew (pilots, air combat systems officers, airborne sensor operators, flight engineers), ground crew (aircraft technicians and logistics personnel), and intelligence officers and operators who supported the coalition’s intelligence capability by processing the vast amounts of data collected by the aircraft.

The mission represents approximately 7,500 hours flown and nearly 6,000 points of interest observed.

On of the Royal Canadian Air Force’s CP140 Aurora aircraft, based at 14 Wing Greenwood, visited the Canadian Warplane Heritage Museum in Hamilton. Ontario, December 7. A crew from 404 (Long Range Patrol and Training) Squadron was in the area conducting high density pilot training.

Aurora crews share, compare aviation experiences at warplane heritage museum

Sara White,
Managing editor

December 7, six members of 404 (Long Range Patrol and Training) Squadron, based at 14 Wing Greenwood, conducted high density pilot training at several locations in Quebec and Ontario. In doing so, the crew took the opportunity to conduct some community outreach at the Canadian Warplane Heritage Museum in Hamilton, Ontario.

The crew provided tours of the CP140 Aurora aircraft to museum staff and visitors for a 30-minute period and spoke to over 100 school kids as part of the air history curriculum, coordinated through the museum.

404 Squadron instructor pilots Captain Chucky Kane and Captain Kevin Hipwell described the operations the CP140 conducts over both water and land, while 404 Squadron flight engineers Sergeant Owen Hughes and Master Corporal Dan Lewis provided a CP140 information session to a large group of maintenance and history program volunteers at the museum.

Museum volunteer David Hills says the word went out quickly the Aurora was coming, as aircraft spotters love to get pictures of visiting aircraft and the day’s visiting school group and museum workers were in for a treat. The aircraft may only visit the museum once a year.

“What the crew and that aircraft do is hidden – you see a picture of the plane, and it could be anywhere doing long range surveillance. They have lots of capabilities, lots of antenna and the airframe is so durable.

“The kids were very enthusiastic and a tonne of volunteers were out – it was definitely a highlight.”

In fact, Hills said, a number of people around the museum’s airfield wondered why they museum was flying its wartime Lancaster in the off-season: “they mistook the Aurora’s big, four-engine noise.”

The museum has approximately 50 Second World War and post-war airplanes in its impressive fleet, most of which are kept in flying condition and conduct regular flights at special events during the summer season. The refurbishment and maintenance of the aircraft is completed by a large cadre of volunteers and a small engineering team. Pilots of all aircraft are also volunteers and comprise former military and civilian pilots. All of the people working at the museum have one thing in common: an incredible passion for warplane capabilities and preservation of Canada’s warplane heritage.

During the three-hour stop in Hamilton, the CP140 crew itself was invited to tour some of the museum’s vintage aircraft, including the famous Avro Lancaster Bomber, one of just 17 left in existence and one of only two in flying condition throughout the world. Of the total of 7,377 Lancasters built (430 of them in Canada), 3,932 were lost in action during the Second World War. In those years, Lancasters flew a total of 156,308 sorties, dropped 608,612 tons of bombs and placed over 12,000 mines in enemy waters (bombercommandmuseum.ca).

“Crawling through the tight spaces of the Lancaster to get to the flight deck and gunner positions was an eerie realization of the dangers the crews faced on a daily basis during the Second World War,” says Lieutenant-Colonel Ray Townsend, commanding officer, 404 Squadron, “and of the exceptional maintenance that took place to keep these important aircraft in the air.

“I have a sense what the crew experienced while inside the Lancaster is similar to what the school kids were thinking when they were able to see inside the Aurora and speak to the crew about their experiences on various operations.... It’s funny how history can repeat itself.”

Christmas elves

Each year, two members of 14 Construction Engineering Squadron take time to help organize a food and toy event, in conjunction with the Salvation Army in Bridgewater, which receives funding from Christmas Daddies. Sergeant Nicole Wamboldt and Master Corporal Taff Glynn Cheeseman work tirelessly to coordinate families and the necessary donations. Then, December 20 and 21, a different group of Christmas elves made the special deliveries to folks who would not have had as happy a holiday as others. Sometimes, Christmas elves dress in combats.

Sunset holiday

December 23, Inez Morneau coordinated a successful Christmas dinner – complete with a turkey dinner and door prizes – for senior residents of the Middleton Sunset Meadows Complex. With two turkeys and the trimmings contributed by the Middleton Foodland, the prize treats donated by a number of other community businesses and the helping hands of helper cook Alice White; 30 guests enjoyed all the social and holiday traditions associated with a Christmas gathering in the complex’s clubhouse. Another nine meals were hand delivered to residents who couldn’t get out to the event; and there were no leftovers to speak of!

Fun By The Numbers
Here's How It Works: Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!
